HOME HEALTH AGENCIES

Home Health care is a wide range of health care services that can be provided in the patient's home to treat an illness or injury. Home health care helps you get better, regain your independence, and become as self-sufficient as possible.

Examples of skilled home health services include:

- Skilled nursing care

- Speech, physical and occupational therapy

- Wound care

- Patient and caregiver education

- Intravenous or nutrition therapy

- Injections

- Monitoring serious illness and unstable health status

Doctor's orders are needed to start care. (If your doctor prescribes Home Health, Medicare will pay for the services.)

Once your doctor refers you for home health services, the home health agency will schedule an appointment and come to your home to talk to you about your needs and ask you some questions about your health.

The home health agency staff will also talk to your doctor about your care and keep your doctor updated about your progress.

It is important that home health staff see you as often as the doctor ordered.

DAY CARE

Day Care Programs usually provide oversight of medication as well as social and recreational programs. The people who benefit most from day care activities are those who live alone, or whose family and friends work during the day. These programs usually operate five days a week, 8:00 am to 5:00 pm. The medical help available is usually limited to administering medications or minor medical treatment supervised by a registered nurse. Occasionally, speech or hearing therapy, physical therapy, or occupational therapy is available, but participants are expected to be mobile.

Medicaid is probably the major source of payment for most people, and providers must approve each person's eligibility.

RESPIRE CARE

Respite care offers support so family or other caregivers can take a break from the demands of continual home care. When someone cares for a person in their home, they may need temporary replacement support when they are unable to provide the care that is needed, such as during a vacation, an emergency, or working hours.

Respite may range from short term care provided for a few hours to an extended number of days or weeks. It may include nursing care, chore services, and meals depending on the provider.

ASSISTED LIVING HOMES

Assisted living homes are distinguished from facilities such as retirement homes by one major characteristic – the residents of assisted living homes need some degree of protective oversight because of disability, age, and/or a higher level of dependency that requires 24-hour supervision, but not skilled nursing care.

Protective oversight means that the resident needs supervision in such areas as nutrition, medications, bathing, grooming, feeding, etc. Residents may have varying degrees of mental impairment that prohibits them from recognizing and/or responding to emergency situations, or that results in difficulty in basic orientation to time, place, people, etc.

NURSING HOMES

Nursing homes provide a next level of care when seniors need skilled care beyond what Assisted Living homes can provide. Registered nurses are available to administer medications and provide 24-hour supervision in areas such as nutrition, bathing, feeding, etc.

Some Nursing homes also provide rehabilitation services following surgery, illness, or injury.

OMBUDSMAN PROGRAM

Ombudsmen are advocates for residents in nursing homes and assisted living facilities. They problem solve concerns or issues and empower residents to speak for themselves. If that is not possible, for whatever reason, the ombudsman will speak for the resident.

Ombudsmen visit facilities on a regular basis to meet with residents, families, and attend resident councils. They provide information about nursing home care as well as other topics such as Medicaid, Medicare and Social Security. They are trained to investigate complaints about health, safety, and welfare of residents, and assist them in exercising their rights.

The resident is the primary focus of the program. All actions must be for the good of the resident.
